The Rhythm and Blues Brothers perform to raise money for The National Brain Appeal

Friday 14 February, 2014

The Rhythm and Blues Brothers, supported by Queensburys and Stella Sta, will be performing a charity gig on Thursday 27 March 2014 in aid of The National Brain Appeal.

The gig will take place at the Richard Mully Bar, UCL Student Union, 136 Gower Street, London, WC1E 6BP.

Doors open at 19:00.

The National Brain Appeal is the charity dedicated to raising essential funds for The National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery, Queen Square, London. The National is one of the world's leading centres for the diagnosis, treatment and research of a range of neurological and neuromuscular conditions including epilepsy, Multiple Sclerosis, stroke, Alzheimer's disease, brain cancer and head injury.

This year the charity celebrates its 30th Anniversary having raised over £40 million since it was established.

All funds raised from this event will go towards the charity's £3 million appeal to redevelop the operating theatres at The National, including the country's first specialist complex spinal theatre.

Tickets are £10 (students £5) and can be booked here.
