

The Wedding of Princess Eugenie and Jack Brooksbank

Friday 12 October, 2018

Princess Eugenie's married Jack Brooksbank at St George's Chapel in Windsor wearing a dress designed by Peter Pilotto and Christopher De Vos and the Greville Emerald Kokoshnik Tiara, lent to her by Her Majesty The Queen.

The dress features a neckline that folds around the shoulders to a low back that drapes into a flowing full length train.

British designer Caroline Castiglano, the connoisseur of handcrafted luxury bridal wear comments;

The Princess looks classic with a contemporary twist. The long sleeves staying in line with Royal tradition, the cuff style neckline and full flowing skirt in a jacquard print has a freshness and simplicity about it.

Princess Eugenie specifically wanted a gown with a low back to show off the scar on her back left from an operation for scoliosis. The Princess has dedicated a lot of time to raising awareness about the condition and by showing off the scar she makes a statement to change the way beauty is.

The simplicity about the gown is definitely on trend. The cuff detailing is very much at the forefront of bridal design today - I am sure elements of the gown will get copied and inspire other young brides in their inspiration for their bridal gown.

Castiglano continues;

The gown is entirely different to Kate's and Meghan's. Kate's bridal gown by McQueen was traditional with a high neck and lace sleeves, very much the gown of the future Queen. On the other hand Meghan's dress was very simple with a stunning neckline and on trend with bridal designs today.

Known for her understated classic designs with a glamorous but effortless feel, Castiglano has dressed some of the world's most stylish women for their weddings and red carpet events.
