

Unlock launches pilot project, supported by the UPP Foundation, to help universities take on students with criminal records

Wednesday 12 September, 2018

EMBARGOED RELEASE: 00:01 GMT on Thursday 13 September 2018

Unlock launches pilot project, supported by the UPP Foundation, to help universities take on students with criminal records

Unlock, an independent charity for people with convictions, has launched a new pilot project, funded by the UPP Foundation, the registered charity founded by University Partnerships Programme (UPP).

The project, Unlocking students with conviction, will see Unlock working with three UK universities – Cardiff University, Goldsmiths and the University of Southampton – supporting them to implement best practice procedures to prevent talented applicants being held back by their past and ensuring universities don't miss out on untapped potential.

It will ensure that more people with convictions are able to access, and benefit from, university education – not just for themselves, but for their families, communities and for society at large.

Inception of the project comes following the decision by UCAS to remove the criminal conviction declaration box for applicants to the 2019 entry cycle, with universities looking at how to amend their admissions practices to reflect the change.

Over 11 million people in England and Wales have a criminal record and every year there are 1.2 million new convictions. The vast majority of convictions – more than 90% - do not involve a prison sentence. Unlock support thousands of people annually who face stigma, discrimination and ongoing disadvantages long after they have served their conviction. Many people choose not to apply for jobs, training or education if they know they will be asked about their criminal record.

The growth of partnerships between prisons and the university sector has renewed the belief that higher education is inclusive and can transform lives - raising the educational aspirations of people with criminal records. Evidence shows that education at every level has a huge impact on reducing reoffending, keeping us all safe.

Alongside working with the three institutions, Unlock will also be working with UCAS to disseminate good practice resources developed for institutions, as well as encouraging other universities to review and improve their policies and procedures.

Commenting on the project launch, Christopher Stacey, co-director of Unlock, said:

"We're pleased to have the support of the UPP Foundation in launching this pilot project. Unlock has seen first-hand how people with convictions have been put off from applying to university. If universities are committed to widening participation, they should be considering the qualified applicants from all backgrounds. The decision by UCAS to remove the main criminal conviction box from the UCAS form for those applying to start university in 2019 signals to universities that criminal records shouldn't feature in their assessment of academic potential."

"At a time when institutions are rightly looking to amend their policies and procedures, we look forward to working with these universities to support them in implementing best practice procedures, as well as encouraging other universities to do the same."

Richard Brabner, Director of the UPP Foundation, said:

"We believe that everyone with the potential and ambition to go to and succeed at university should have the ability to do so. The UPP Foundation is delighted to be working with Unlock to ensure more students with criminal convictions can access higher education, transforming their lives and supporting their transition back into society."

Related Sectors:

Business & Finance :: Charities & non-profits :: Education & Human Resources :: Lifestyle & Relationships :: Media & Marketing :: Public Sector & Legal ::

Related Keywords:

Unlock :: Conviction :: University :: UPP :: Education :: Criminal Record ::

Scan Me:

ENDS

For more information or interview requests, please contact Christopher Stacey, Co-director. Email christopher.stacey@unlock.org.uk or call 07557 676433 (daytime or out-of-hours).

Notes to editors

1. Christopher Stacey is Unlock's spokesperson and available for interview. Profile here.
2. Unlock is an independent, award-winning national charity that provides a voice and support for people with convictions who are facing stigma and obstacles because of their criminal record, often long after they have served their sentence. Unlock's website is www.unlock.org.uk.
3. The UPP Foundation is a registered charity that offers grants to universities, charities and other higher education bodies. In recent years, as higher education has expanded, the burden of paying for a degree has shifted towards the individual. This presents difficulties in maintaining the 'University for the Public Good', as well as ensuring there is greater equity in going to, succeeding at and benefiting from the university experience. The UPP Foundation helps universities and the wider higher education sector overcome these challenges. The UPP Foundation was created in 2016 by University Partnerships Programme (UPP), the leading provider of on campus student accommodation infrastructure and support services in the UK. UPP is the sole funder of the UPP Foundation. The UPP Foundation is an independent charity and all of its grants are reviewed and authorised by its Board of Trustees. The Foundation is supported by an Advisory Board. More information is available at the UPP Foundation website: www.upp-foundation.org
4. There are over 11 million people in the UK that have a criminal record.
5. High-resolution images for media use are available from Unlock's Flickr account.
6. Details about the Unlocking students with conviction project are available here.
7. Details about the decision by UCAS are available here.

Company Contact:

—

Unlock - for people with convictions

T. 01622230705

E. admin@unlock.org.uk

Additional Contact(s):

Press contact: Christopher Stacey, Co-director. christopher.stacey@unlock.org.uk / 07557676433.

View Online

Newsroom: Visit our Newsroom for all the latest stories:

<https://www.unlock.pressat.co.uk>