Utopia Creations specialises in personalised sales because they feel this is the best way to encourage strong relationships between brand and consumer and delivers the best results for their clients. Here, Utopia Creations has revealed the 4 tips they believe that their contractors could implement to improve their sales skills during these face-to-face interactions with consumers.

Know what you're selling

Utopia Creations encourages every salesperson to understand the products they sell. "Every product solves a specific problem for qualified prospects and it is our job to understand what each product does," shared a spokesperson for Utopia Creations.

Don't assume people know anything about the product

When people have been selling a long time it is easy to lose sight of how much they know and how much an average consumer knows about the products or services on offer. "It is important to understand the gap between a potential client's perception and the reality of your services to be able to effectively sell," revealed Utopia Creations.

Define your target market

Who does the product help most? Where can these consumers be found? Are there concerns they should be aware of? One of the biggest reasons people don't buy from a salesperson is that the potential consumers don't feel the salesperson understands their needs or struggles. "By speaking to our potential consumers directly we can understand the needs and concerns of our target market so that they have a genuine connection with us and understanding of the product before they buy," outlined Utopia Creations.

Ask for the business

"Always close by asking the potential consumer to do business with you," highlights Utopia Creations. Every good salesperson ends a conversation with a call to action asking a potential consumer to make a decision. It is important to finish the first encounter with the opportunity to continue the conversation and increase the relationship.

Utopia Creations believes in the importance of consistently improving and developing their strategies and their skill sets in order to be the best sales and marketing agency for their clients.
