National Geographic Traveller (UK) is delighted to announce it is the exclusive media partner for the People's Choice category in the World Responsible Tourism Awards 2015 at WTM — the only publically voted category in the Awards. The winner will be announced live at the World Responsible Tourism Awards ceremony during World Travel Market on 4 November 2015, in front of an audience of tourism officials, professionals, ministers and media.

The finalists include an NGO educating the tourism industry and putting a stop to the unnecessary use of wild animals in tourism, an adventure park in rural Brazil redefining the meaning of truly accessible tourism, and an off-grid luxury beach resort near Zanzibar which has been conserving a fragile marine park and successfully supporting local students through education and into employment.

National Geographic Traveller has partnered with Responsible Travel to become one of the official media partners for the Awards — the world's most prestigious and largest event for responsible tourism.

Pat Riddell, editor of National Geographic Traveller (UK), said: "We feel privileged to partner with Responsible Travel and act as the official media partner for these prestigious awards. National Geographic Traveller seeks to champion sustainable and responsible travel and as such we are excited about hosting the voting for the Peoples Choice for Responsible Tourism in the global search for the most inspirational and enduring responsible tourism experiences in the world."

Justin Francis, managing director of Responsible Travel, the founders and organisers of World Responsible Tourism Awards at WTM said "One of the main aims of the Awards is to inspire travellers and the tourism industry by what is possible to achieve with responsible tourism.

"The People's Choice Award is a real celebration of the best of the best globally. These diverse organisations are previous winners, already proven to be the leaders and innovators driving positive changes in the tourism industry, but we now want to know which of these provides the real inspiration to the travelling public.

"National Geographic Traveller UK's readers, with their keen interest in authentic, engaging travel experiences are perfectly placed to vote."

Those who vote will be automatically entered into a prize draw to win a walking holiday to the Amalfi Coast, Italy for two worth £2,400, courtesy of Exodus Travels
